Due diligence processes

Assessing our risks

In insurance underwriting, we have identified specific industries and businesses with high human rights risks based on international norms regarding human rights, external information and industry trends. For these industries and businesses, we determine whether or not to underwrite them based on internal policies and procedures, and by taking into consideration human rights and modern slavery risks.

Addressing our risks

The parent company TMHD regularly carries out monitoring of initiatives for compliance and risk management in the business operations of Group companies including TMAM. Specifically, based on the "Tokio Marine Group Basic Policy on Personnel", Tokio Marine Group requires TMHD and Tokio Marine Group companies* to (1) formulate and thoroughly implement policies, (2) improve organisational structure, (3) implement training, (4) formulate and implement policies for fair recruitment selection, and (5) formulate harassment prevention regulations in the workplace and establish a consultation desk, etc. We also require them to report on these achievements.

In addition, Group companies in Japan conduct self-inspections using the Tokio Marine Group Checklist on Human Rights Issues in order to; deepen our understanding of our progress on human rights efforts as an employer; identify human rights and labour issues for our Group employees; and prevent, mitigate, and improve such issues.

There may be cases where it is not appropriate to report a possible compliance problem including modern slavery through a usual reporting channel set up within the organisation. To prepare for such cases, Tokio Marine Group operates internal and external hotlines (whistleblower contact points) to receive reports and inquiries from directors, officers and employees of Group companies. We clearly specify in our regulations that we will never allow persons making such reports or inquiries and those cooperating in investigations to be exposed to negative consequences because of their action and keep details of reports and inquiries strictly confidential.

In addition, we have established a hotline for external stakeholders to submit their grievances and concerns relating to human rights abuses aiming to establish an effective grievance mechanism for individuals and communities.

*"Tokio Marine Group companies" refers to the companies specified in the "Basic Policy for the Management of Group Companies."

Assessing the effectiveness of our actions

In the event that an employee, a director or an officer discovers an issue or potential issue in relation to compliance, Tokio Marine Group requires such person to immediately report and consult on the issue through organisational channels based on the "Tokio Marine Group Compliance Standards". However, to prepare for cases where it is not appropriate for employees or directors and officers to report or consult through organisational channels, the Group has installed in-house and external whistle-blowing channels (hotlines), which are staffed by internal and external specialists.

The department in charge summarises the patterns and number of reports sent to the counter and utilises the information to improve efforts on human rights and labour practices.-

In addition, Tokio Marine Group regularly conducts employee engagement surveys and monitors employee satisfaction with the environment of respect for human rights in the workplace.

Training

Tokio Marine Group companies conduct Human Rights training as part of various training programmes including the programmes for new recruits and e-learning and regular programmes in the workplace, in which all employees and other co-workers take part to build a vibrant corporate culture without slavery, human trafficking, discrimination and harassment. TMAM also conducts Sustainability training and Compliance training for all employees to promote the understanding of and efforts to address human rights-related issues including modern slavery.

Future commitments

As a Group, and with the cooperation of our business partners, we will continuously work to prevent the occurrence of modern slavery and promote respect for human rights throughout our business activities including the entire value chain.
